It was not until the morning of the next day that the audience was able to get a glimpse of the play. The play was a farce, and the audience was not in the mood to receive it. The play was a farce, and the audience was not in the mood to receive it. The play was a farce, and the audience was not in the mood to receive it.

As we were entering the theatre, we were told that the play was not worth seeing. We were told that the play was not worth seeing. We were told that the play was not worth seeing.
